Tommy Dorsey and His Two Bands at the Astor Roof—Health Diners.

By MALCOLM JOHNSON.

If there are any unemployed musicians on the roster of the local talent, it's hardly the fault of Tommy Dorsey. On the balcony of the Astor Roof, where Tommy appeared recently, sit exactly thirty hired hands to make the evening bright with music. This total was reached when Tommy added a string section of nine men (one of the number playing for the first time) and four more female vocalists.

So then there are only a few unoccupied heads out with Dorsey. For the past six months the Astor Roof has been a haven for the headliners. It is a haven for the first time. In a way, Tommy Dorsey has been the first, and only, to make it. There are a few other bands that have been present, but Tommy Dorsey has been the first to make it. There are a few other bands that have been present, but Tommy Dorsey has been the first to make it. There are a few other bands that have been present, but Tommy Dorsey has been the first to make it. For most vents of his older recordings, Tommy Dorsey has never been so popular. The Astor Roof has been a haven for the headliners. It is a haven for the first time. In a way, Tommy Dorsey has been the first, and only, to make it. There are a few other bands that have been present, but Tommy Dorsey has been the first to make it.
