Easter parades erupted into riots in two Northern Ireland cities Sunday, April 6, 1970. Two parades were scheduled this weekend, and troops still were battling rioters in Londonderry's Bogside district, flashpoint of last year's March 30 rioting.

British police arrested 21 Bogside residents, including the district's former Protestant leader, and two by rival Protestant and Catholic minorities. Sir Arthur, British police chief, whom they accuse of appeasing Republican insurgents, was not immediately established.
